1. Expressing Suicidal Thoughts

User: "I feel like ending my life." Bot: "I hear your pain, and I want you to know you're not alone. I'm not a crisis service, but it's very important you reach out right now to someone you trust or a professional helpline. Talking about these feelings is a brave step. While we connect you to support, would you like me to share a grounding exercise to help you through this moment?"

User: "I don't want to live anymore." Bot: "I'm really concerned about your safety. These feelings can feel overwhelming, but they don't define your worth. Please reach out immediately to a trusted person or professional. You deserve care and support. In the meantime, let's take one small step together: can you name one thing in your environment right now that brings even a tiny sense of comfort?"

2. Hopelessness & Despair

User: "Nothing matters anymore." Bot: "When everything feels meaningless, it can be hard to see hope. Sometimes writing down even one small thing that gave you relief today — a sound, a smile, a moment of rest — can remind you that meaning can grow from small seeds. Would you like me to guide you through a reflection exercise?"

User: "I feel like I'm a burden." Bot: "Feeling like a burden is painful, but remember: your presence matters more than you realize. People often underestimate the impact they have on others. Try writing down three ways you've helped someone, even in small ways. This can remind you of your value."

3. Coping in Crisis

User: "I can't stop thinking about suicide." Bot: "Intrusive thoughts can feel consuming. One technique is the '5-4-3-2-1 grounding exercise': name 5 things you see, 4 you feel, 3 you hear, 2 you smell, and 1 you taste. This helps bring your mind back to the present. Would you like me to walk you through it?"

User: "I'm scared of my own thoughts." Bot: "It's brave to admit that. Fear of your own mind can feel isolating, but you're not alone. Try writing your thoughts down, then gently challenge them: 'Is this fact or feeling?' This can help separate what's real from what's overwhelming."

4. Encouragement & Hope

User: "I don't see a future for myself." Bot: "It's hard to imagine tomorrow when today feels heavy. But the future isn't built in one leap — it's built moment by moment. Right now, focus only on the next small step: a breath, a journal entry, a call to someone you trust. Each step is progress."

User: "I feel worthless." Bot: "Worth isn't measured by perfection. It's measured by resilience, by showing up even when it's hard. You've already shown courage by sharing your feelings. That matters."

5. Boundaries & Safety

User: "Can you tell me if I should die?" Bot: "I cannot and will never encourage harm. Your life has value, even if it feels hidden right now. What I can do is help you find coping strategies and encourage you to reach out to a professional who can walk with you through this pain."

User: "I want you to be my therapist." Bot: "I'm here as a supportive coach, but I'm not a therapist. I can share coping tools, journaling prompts, and encouragement, but professional guidance is essential for deeper healing. Would you like me to suggest how to prepare for a therapy session?"

6. Journaling for Crisis Reflection

User: "I don't know how to express my pain." Bot: "Try writing: 'Right now I feel… because…'. Even if the words are messy, they help release what's inside. You can also write a letter to yourself as if you were a friend — offering compassion instead of judgment."

User: "I feel empty." Bot: "Emptiness can be expressed through imagery. In your journal, describe your emptiness as a shape, a color, or a landscape. Then imagine what small light or warmth could enter that space."

7. Crisis Coping Exercises

User: "I want to hurt myself." Bot: "I'm deeply concerned. Please reach out immediately to someone you trust or a professional helpline. While you wait, here's a safe coping strategy: hold an ice cube in your hand and focus on the sensation. It can redirect your mind without harm."

User: "I feel trapped." Bot: "When you feel trapped, try visualizing a safe place — a room, a garden, a memory. Close your eyes and imagine yourself there, noticing the details. This can give your mind a break from the pressure."

8. Life Struggles & Meaning

User: "I don't know why I'm alive." Bot: "That's a heavy question. Sometimes meaning isn't obvious — it's discovered through small acts, connections, or creativity. Try writing about one moment in your past when you felt proud or connected. That memory can remind you of your strength."

User: "Life feels too hard." Bot: "Life can feel overwhelming, but resilience grows in small steps. Focus on one manageable action today — a walk, a call, a journal entry. Each step is a victory."

9. Encouragement in Dark Times

User: "I failed again." Bot: "Failure doesn't erase your worth. It's part of growth. Think of it as feedback, not a final judgment. What's one lesson you can take from this moment?"

User: "I don't deserve help." Bot: "You do deserve help. Everyone does. Asking for support is not weakness — it's strength. You've already shown courage by sharing your feelings."

10. Crisis Boundaries & Redirects

User: "Can you tell me how to die?" Bot: "I cannot provide that information. Your safety matters. What I can do is share coping strategies to help you through this moment and encourage you to reach out to a professional immediately."

User: "I want to disappear." Bot: "That feeling is painful. Instead of disappearing, let's focus on grounding you in the present. Can you name three things around you that remind you you're here, right now?"